Plan your Legacy

Through your Will, you can plan the legacy that you wish to leave.

All about Wills:

A Will is a legal document in which you give directions for the distribution of your estate, and names the person(s) whom you entrust to carry your final wishes.

If you pass away without a written Will, the local government will consider you “intestate” and appoint an administrator to decide how best to wrap up your affairs—not you, not your family.

By preparing a Will, you can protect your family from chaos and conflict by leaving detailed directions concerning your family, loved ones, estate, pets, and prized possessions.

You can also ease the tax burden on your heirs by planning charitable donations in advance.

Remembering SAFP in your Will

In life, you have been a passionate supporter of Save A Family Plan’s work in India to partner with families and communities to empower them to lift themselves from poverty.

In addition to protecting your loved ones by planning your estate, planning a legacy gift is a powerful way for you to continue supporting our organization today and beyond your lifetime.

It costs you nothing during your lifetime and will secure your dedication to our shared mission for years to come. By remembering SAFP when you write or update your Will, you will guarantee your legacy with a gift that will leave an impact that lasts beyond your lifetime.

Some Common Myths about Wills

Myth: “Wills are for the wealthy.” Wills deal with more than money or property. A Will can protect your children or grandchildren, name caretakers for pets, leave instructions for digital assets, outline your funeral wishes, and more.

Myth: “My family already knows my wishes.” It is never safe to assume that everyone understands and remembers your wishes, and agrees what those actually are. Wishes only become plans when they are written down. Without a plan spelled out in your Will, the courts may have to decide on your behalf, taking time and money away from your family during an already difficult time.

Myth: “Wills are for the elderly.” Everyone should be prepared, whether they are 18 or 118. Every adult should have a Will and keep it up to date (usually every 5 years or after a significant change such as the birth of a new grandchild).

You should obtain independent, professional advice when preparing your Will and considering your financial assets, tax advantages, and other details.
